

Emergenetics International has been named one of the 2014 Colorado Companies to Watch. On Friday, June 20th, Dr. Geil Browning, Founder and CEO, and Morgan Browning, President and COO, accepted the award on behalf of the company at the Awards Ceremony and Gala held at the Denver Marriott City Center. Both the Denver and New York offices attended the ceremony to celebrate the honor.

This is a significant milestone for the company that began in 1991 with Dr. Browning working as an independent trainer from her home office, and has grown into an international organization with headquarters in Asia and Europe, regional offices in over 30 different countries, and over 1,800 certified Associates. Described as “change agents”, “movers and shakers”, and “the best and brightest”, the Companies to Watch program honors second-stage Colorado companies each year in recognition of their development of valuable products and services, creation of quality jobs, enriching communities, and creating new industries.

As a winner, Emergenetics International is one of 50 companies selected from an initial candidate pool of 1,200 nominees. The Colorado Companies to Watch Award, now in its sixth year, is a celebration of the companies that are fueling the economic fire of the State of Colorado. Developed by the Edward Lowe Foundation and hosted by the Colorado Office of Economic Development & International Trade, the award helps energize the state of Colorado by recognizing second-stage companies that are developing valuable products and services, creating quality jobs, enriching communities, and creating new industries throughout the state.
